A Little Misunderstanding. manager to compose the music for a new pantomime. The librettist, whom Cellier had never met, was an eccentric person cometery and who wrote pantomimes in his leisure hours. In Manchester there are two cemeteries close together, and the cabman took Cellier to the wrong one. "Ah!" said Alfred, with a light comedy manner, us he entered the office; "ah! how do you do sir? Very pleased to meet you." The g_tleman glanced at him over his glasses and contented himself by saying curtly: "Good evening. Hum! You're very late, sir" (this rather repreachfully).

"Yes," said Alfred apologetically; "I am, rather; but the fact is, I only just got in from London." "Then," said the other, "I suppose I must make an exception in your ease; but it's not usual to enter anything in the book after 4 o'clock." was about the book I came to speak," said Cellier. The gentleman, with a sigh of resignation, seated himself at his desk, "Name?" said be. "Alfred Cellier," replied the possessor of that name, getting mystified. "Male or female?" said the questioner. Alfred uneasily shifted his chair nearer the door, and said: "I beg pardon?" "You heard what I said, sir," sternly replied the other; "male or female?" "Male," said Cellier, driven to desperation. "On what date?" Cellier took up his walking stick, determined to be ready for any emergency, and said: "I don't know for certain, sir, but I suppose it will be on Boxing Day; that is the day on which pantomimes are generally pro-The gentleman rose from his desk, seized the ruler, and, with his eyes steadily fixed on Cellier's, got behind an armchair, then, backing to the door of an inner room, locked the door sharply after him, and Ceilier heard him call—out of a back window, presumably—'Mary, get a oliceman. He's mad."-San Francisco

The Tomb of Mansolus.

The word mausoleum is from Mausolus. the name of a king of Caria, in Asia Minor. On his death, B. C. 353, his widow, Artemisia, who was also his sister, erected so magnificent a tomb that it was no counted one of the wonders of the ancient world. It was in Halicarnassus, on the site of the present Turkish city of Boudroum, and for 1,500 years was to the ancient and mediaval world what the Taj Mahal is to the modern. It was destroyed in the Twelfth century by an earthquake, and its site was forgotten until 1404, when the city was occupied by the Knights of St. John, and accidental discoveries led to excava tions. During the present century the sarcopbagus of Mausolus and that of Artemisia have been discovered, also the statues of both and manf bas reliefs and fragments

The ground plan has been distinctly traced, the area being 100 by 126 feet. The monument consisted of a basement sixty-five feet in height, on which was an Ionic colonnade twenty-five feet high, above which rose a pyramid with the statues of Mausolus and Artemisia at the summit. The total height is 140 feet. The investigations and excavations were carried on about the middle of this century under the auspices of the British government, and the sculptures discovered are now in the British museum.-St. Louis Globe-Demo-

A transparency in one of the windows of the Catlin Indian gallery, at the National museum, shows an Indian drilling a hole through a piece of shell. He is making money. Not that the photographer had to pay him a great deal to sit for this portrait, but he is manufacturing those flat bends, which most of the Pacific coast Indians rate at one cent apiec Indeed, shell seems to have been the earest, as it is now the favorite money among he lower tribes of men. Every one has heard about the wampum of our eastern Indians. It was made of clam and other shells, cut and worked to the shape of 'bugle' beads, and was used for currency, recording events, making treaties and in religious ceremonies. The finest old warnoum belts are still in the possession of the roquois of New York, and the old treaty elt of Penn is in the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia. Sometimes whole shells are used, as the cowries of Asia and Africa and the tusk or dentalium shells of the Indians of Washington, Oregonal and California. The latter shell is a hollow curved tube resembling a tooth. They pass, according to size, from twenty-five cents to two dollars. Broken bits pass as our small change, and small shells are made into pretty necklaces for the squaws.—Philadelphia Press.

A Foot Measuring Machine. A Baltimore man has recently taken out patents for a machine that takes the measure of a foot just as the familiar apparatus used by the hatters measures and draws a diagram of a man's head. The principle of the machine is the same, a series of movable pins conforming to the outline of the foot and registering the shape thus indicated. It is rather a coincidence to note in this connection that the diagram made by a hat measuring machine invariably re

remarks that she is going to give one of her black dress skirts to the servant, whereupon the latter inquires, "Is it a nice one, miss?" although she knows that it will come to her just as the young lady has herself worn it. It is beginning to be a serious question as to what we shall do with our laid aside garments, since, how-ever well made and well conditioned they may be, whenever they cease to be desirable to the comfortably situated woman they have no attractiveness for her maid, her cook or even her laundress. It seems wicked to burn them up when so many human beings are going in rags.

Speaking of saving garments, why does not somebody invent a preservative for woolen clothing and furs that shall prevent moth and rust from corrupting and shall yet not infect everything it approackes with an inceadicable odor of ill smel ing chemicals!
